THE board of health of New Orleans i ally niive to the necessity for continued saniary work. At a meeting of that body held a few days ago, Dr. Choppin, its president, declared that five hundred thousand dollars would be necessary to accomplish all that is needed to prepare that city for next summer, and he proposed to be one of five hundred gentlemen to subscribe one hundred dollars each to raise the amount, since the city and State refuse. For this sum, he says, a system of drainage might be effected that would not only prevent yellow-fever and other contagious diseases, but also consumption, depheria, meningitis, typhoid and malarial fevers. We hope there is local pride enough left in New Orleans to assist Dr. Choppin in als healthy designs. To carry them to peranguine citizens have ever dreamed of.

As regularity as congress meets, we have the invariable call for a Mississippi and western river river improvement convention, with a view of somehow extracting a few millions from the Federal treasury. The programme has the usual stereotyped complexion. The time is February, 1886, but the place is not yet decided upon, though it would probably be New Orleans or Memphis. If the States through which the Mississippi runs would but try and damup the breaks in the river banks and dredge the sand banks, without waiting for the Washington spoon, we are lacilized to think they would be astonished, not only at the success which would crown their forts, but wonder why they never thought of it before. He appoints the mayor, and the legislature has assumed the most important law-making powers. When this change was made we pointed out the possible dangerous consequences, while we frankly admitted that a city so hepel-sily in debt and in trouble might be more excusable for what we feared was false policy, than the legislature which permitted it. In view of the difficulties in the way of city government, we went further and admitted that there might be two sides to the question. The problem of the day is city government, where piles of increasing and never-diminishing debt is dicate that, for crowded cities, at least, the present city autonomous government seems to be, in its present form, a failure everywhere in this country.—Nashwill: American.
